Zombie boy wallpaper cell phone

I found a cell phone in good condition in a trash can. What can I do with it, it charges. I don't want to sell it and I don't use T-Mobile. Is there anything fun I can do with it? On a scale of complexity per cubic inch, cell phones are some of the most sophisticated devices people use on a daily basis. Modern cell phones can handle millions of calculations per second in order to compress and unpack the voice stream. If you've read How Cell Phones Work, you know that they can transmit and receive on hundreds of FM channels, switching channels in sync with base stations as the phone moves between cells. If you ever take a mobile phone apart you'll find that it contains only a few separate parts: a microscopic microphoneA speakerAn LCD or a plasma displayA keyboard not unlike the one we saw in the TV remote control, the amazing printed board containing the guts of the phone's printed board is the heart of the system. Here's one of the typical Ericsson cell phone: In this picture some of the components are identified. Starting on the left side, you see analog and digital and digital analog conversion chips. You can learn more about the A-to-D and D-to-A conversion and its meaning for digital audio in How COMPACT Files work. The DSP is a digital signal processor - a highly configured processor designed to perform signal manipulation calculations at high speed. This DSP is estimated at about 40 MIPS (millions of instructions per second) and processes all signal compression and decompression. The microprocessor (Ericsson phones use the ASIC version of the q-80) and memory handle all household chores for the keyboard and display, dealing with command and signaling control from the base station, and coordinating the rest of the functions on board. The RF and Power section handles power management and recharging, and also deals with hundreds of FM channels. Finally, RF amplifiers process signals to and from the antenna. Surprisingly, all this functionality, which just 30 years ago would have filled the entire floor of the office building, now fits into a package that sits comfortably in the palm of your hand. The 5G-enabled LG Stylo 7 mid-ranger is expected to see daylight at some point in early 2021 with a completely different design than its 4G LTE-only predecessors.
